Excerpt from Address on the Genius, Public Life, and Opinions of Alexander Hamilton: Delivered at Richmond, V. A., May 9, 1856, by Request of the Ladies of the Central Mount Vernon Association, and in Aid of the Purchase of Mount Vernon Ladies and Gentlemen: In accepting the invitation to visit Richmond and deliver an Address in aid of the high and patriotic objects of the Mount Vernon Association, I perform a most, gratifying public duty. The only cloud which hovers around the effort, is the doubt in my own mind, as to my fitness and capacity for the undertaking; arising not only from the complete occupation of my time in the discharge of my official duties which has precluded the attention required for preparation, - but from the character of my previous studies, which have been more practical than literary or historical. I rely upon the liberality and universally acknowledged kindness, which so much distinguish the people of this City, for the removal of this cloud, rather than upon my own ability to dispel it in the delivery of this address. Ladies and Gentlemen; I have chosen for my subject to-night, Alexander Hamilton - his character - his genius - his public services. - A theme which in its magnitude and interest will supply any deficiency in its discussion - a subject which, while it challenges the deepest study of the early history of this country, and calls forth and revives a recollection of the sentiments which surrounded and imbued the fathers of the Republic, will also make its application to many of the public questions of this day, and produce reflections, not at all Haltering to our own boasted advancement, superior intelligence and knowledge of Government.
