Apostolic Service: Priestliness The Anatomy of True Ministry

Art Katz

Priesthood is at the heart of everything, and probably one of the most lamentable lacks in modern Christianity is the absence of the sense of priestliness. If someone had asked me in my adolescence in Brooklyn, New York, as a troubled and perplexed kid trying to make sense out of a bewildering universe, What is your true vocation? What is it to which you think you are called? I knew, even in my atheistic ignorance, that the real answer, if I had the courage to speak it, was, Priest. Now I can understand better what my heart already knew about the centrality of priesthood. It is something that needs to be intuited and apprehended. We stand in a very peculiar danger of adopting yet another religious vocabulary. In the same way that we have been inducted into the charismatic, we can easily be inducted into an apostolic form of speaking and have yet another phraseology to which, in the end, we have just been rendered mere technicians. This is the most horrible of all fates, that we should have taken these holy and absolute things and made of them yet another weary, religious form. Something is required, if we are going to be a vital church in word, deed and presence, that is going to unmask and reveal the principalities and powers and fulfill the eternal purpose of God. The thing that will save us from being mere technicians is one thing only, namely, the knowledge of the reality of God. Therefore we are commended to consider Jesus in Hebrews 3:1, Therefore, holy brethren, partakers of a heavenly calling, consider Jesus, the Apostle and High Priest of our confession. There is an inexorable connection between that which is apostolic and that which is priestly. There has been no neglect in our thinking of things apostolic, but there is a conspicuous lack of awareness of things priestly. We might attempt some fulfillment of other ministries and callings without the necessity of having a high-priestly center, although I doubt that, but there is something about that which is apostolic that is eternally joined to that which is high-priestly. What is expressed in the heavenly calling of Jesus and indeed that which makes it heavenly is necessarily part of our calling as well. Until God shall inspire and restore in us a true sense of priestliness, we will not be partaking in a calling that is heavenly. The word heavenly does not refer to something spatial, but to a mind-set, a mentality, a condition or a mode of being. It is a particular character of something that is so hard to define, but when you encounter it, when something of it is wafted over you or communicated to you, then you know it. If that word is esoteric, if it is just a fanciful designation that has a clouded meaning, then that means that our priestliness is equally as clouded. The world is destitute of heavenliness for the want of priests who are able to bring that dimension of reality. In fact, another synonym for heaven is reality. Whatever reality is, then that is heaven. It takes even a priestly mentality to sense that and to feel for that and a priestly ministry to introduce that in a world that is inhospitable to heaven. Earth resists heavenly things, and yet mankind languishes for the lack of them. I had for a long time considered the teaching on the priestly garments and all the nomenclature pertaining to priesthood to be quite dull. I am now, however, convinced that there is an eternal weight of glory in all the things that pertain to priesthood. Priestliness must both precede and accompany the apostolic walk. What we so urgently need is for God to breathe upon us from heaven the spirit of true priesthood and to touch and transform every aspect of our life, our walk and our ministry with the sense of things that pertain to priestliness.
