

BRUTAL (LEE COB SERIES Book 4)

Drawn into a case of intrigue and murder involving the FBI and assorted nut-cases intent on getting rich no matter how many lives it took, ex Detective Lee Cob had taken two bullets in his body in helping to apprehend the murderer. He returned to England and took refuge in a cottage in the Lake District, owned by his friend and ex partners mother-in-law. Here he could repair the damage to both body and mind, and come to terms with his own mortality. Over the last two and a half years he felt he had stared death in the face too many times and lived to tell the tale. If he continued pushing his luck it must surely run out soon. Cob spent his days fishing, the float bobbing around in the eddies of the lake. His mind was a blank most of the time, his nights taken up with pub meals and walks around the lake. A lonely existence, but one he preferred right now. The appearance of the stranger surprised him, and what he had to say brought Cobs defences up. No one was supposed to know he was here. He had purposely hunkered down in this remote part of England in order to become anonymous. He needed his space. But what the man had to say intrigued him, drawing him back into a life he thought he had done with, and it was with some foreboding, that within a week he found himself caught up in an even worse kind of horror than he had left behind in America, and as the body count mounted he once again found his resolve tested to breaking point.
