Excerpt from Holderness: An Account of the Beginnings of a New Hampshire Town
I trust that some, who sigh, while wandering in thought, Pilgrims of Romance o'er the olden world, That our broad land, - our sea-like lakes and mountains Piled to the clouds, our rivers overhung By forests which have known no other change For ages than the budding and the fall Of leaves, our valleys lovelier than those Which the old poets sang of, - should but figure On the apocryphal chart of speculation As pastures, wood-lots, mill-sites, with the privileges, Rights, and appurtenances, which make up A Yankee Paradise, unsung, unknown, To beautiful tradition, ... will look kindly Upon this effort to call up the ghost Of the dim Past.
