

Madwives: Schizophrenic Women in the 1950s

An important contribution to the study of mental illness, gender roles, and family interaction. . . . An insightful and well-written book demonstrating the pervasive consequences of gender roles for the deepest levels of mind and emotion.--American Journal of Sociology Opens a window onto the lives of the mentally ill and their families.--Womens Review of Books Warrens analysis is painstaking and illuminating, and there is plenty of material here to interest those concerned with issues of gender and mental illness.--Times Higher Education Supplement The women make the authors major points in riveting fashion, speaking eloquently of enforced dependency and subjugation, the helplessness of rigid and constantly reinforced gender-role boundaries, and outright manipulation by their husbands.--Contemporary Psychology Can marriage make women go crazy? Carol Warren addresses this question by emphasizing the connections between gender-stereotypical behavior and the institutionalization of married women in the 1950s, using interviews collected . . . during 1957-61. . . . An interesting sociological reworking of the original psychologically oriented interpretation of the interviews.--Oral History Review Carol A. B. Warren is a professor of sociology at the University of Kansas and author of The Court of Last Resort: Mental Illness and the Law.
