

My Friend Annabel Lee - Annotated Edition

Mary MacLanes least-known book affords a completely different view of the writer being rediscovered as the first blogger, known even in her time as the first of the Flappers. Written in 1902-1903 after the international sensation of her 1902 proto-blog I Await the Devils Coming (published as The Story of Mary MacLane), the 21-year-old author threw critics and public a curve. Rather than try to top her first books fire and thunder, she turned around completely and wrote a book of tremulous sensitivity - and ruthless self-analysis. Set in the form of dialogues, with an exchange of letters near the end, MacLane splits herself in two and has the two sides meet in friendship and battle: the gnomic, ironic, declarative, unflappable Annabel Lee and the depressive, credulous, clingy narrator, Mary MacLane. Nature is almost non-existent in this tale: the setting hardly ever moves from their shared apartment, and then only to return to the scene of psychic tension. A close reading of its beauties and relentless focus on style discloses her most finished book and the purest exhibition of her incipient Surrealism. Detailed textual notes, drawn from the Petrarca anthology Human Days: A Mary MacLane Reader, make this edition - of the book she may have most written to, by and for herself - unique among all those currently on offer. With this publication, all of MacLanes books become available in Petrarca Press annotated editions for Kindle.

About the author: I sing only the Ego and the individual. So does in secret each man and woman and child who breathes, but is afraid to sing it aloud. - Mary MacLane (1881-1929) was the first of the modern media personalities: a pioneer in self-revelation, in defiance of established rules, in living on her own terms - and writing about it. At age 19 she burst upon the world out of Butte, Montana with a journal of her private thoughts and longings that brought national then international attention. Through the books and newspaper articles that followed she created a completely new, individual voice decades ahead of its time. She influenced Gertrude Stein, inspired F. Scott Fitzgerald, and was hailed by Americas greatest writers and everyday people on the street. And though she inspires film, stage, and music projects to this day - though she is quoted on and off the Internet - the writer behind the writing has remained unknown until her recent rediscovery. - She comes off the page quivering with life. Moving. - London Times (1981 retrospect) - Mary MacLane, 1902s Racy, Angsty Teenage Diarist, wrote long before provocative, confessional writing was a genre of its own. Her diaries ignited a national uproar, ushering in a new era for womens voices. Her elegant, ambitious embrace of full-disclosure had opened a door to what was possible for women. - The Atlantic, March 2013 - Mary MacLanes first book was the first of the confessional diaries ever written in this country, and it was a sensation. - N.Y. Times (editorial) - She had a short but fiery life of writing and misadventure, and her writing was a template for the confessional memoirs that have become ubiquitous. - The New Yorker, March 2013 - One of the most fascinatingly self-involved personalities of the 20th century. - The Age (Nov. 2011 feature article) - Miss MacLane stands as the greatest sensationalist of a sensational day She dares to tell to all the world what most people try to keep profoundly guarded She stands for truth and dares the courage of her convictions. - From hundreds of letters-to-the-editor on her first book - In a pre-soundbite age she already knew how to draw blood in one direct sentence. Mary MacLane - who openly resisted the idea that she was like everyone else, of her time or any other - lived the dream, as we say nowadays, and the sun of the wide, bright world has come to shine on her again. - The Awl, March 2013
