Excerpt from The North American Founded in 1771: The Oldest Daily Newspaper in America Two previous volumes containing some of this newspapers principal editorials on the war were welcomed by so many readers in this country and abroad that the series is continued. The articles are arranged, as before, in chronological order, and comprise a more or less connected survey of important developments in the period treated. The first collection dealt with events from the beginning of the war to the operations at Gallipoli. The second carried the record to the Battle of the Somme. The present volume pertains to the history of the third year, down to the time when the Russian revolution and Americas participation had changed the whole character of the conflict.
