

The Diplomatic Year: Being a Review of Mr. Seward's Foreign Correspondence of 1862 (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from The Diplomatic Year: Being a Review of Mr. Seward's Foreign Correspondence of 1862. Mr. Seward has thrown down another challenge to the world. He has issued a volume - rather more than twice as thick as the one he printed a year ago - containing his annual correspondence with all the nations of the earth. He invites criticism - or he sets it at defiance; and in neither case, can he or his admirers, (of whom he no doubt has some,) complain, if it be fair and manly. Such is the aim of the following pages - the writer at the outset pledging himself to demonstrate, that Mr. Seward's pretensions to scholarship, to statesmanship, or to enlightened patriotism in dealing with the foreign, or, so far as he has had to do with them, the domestic relations of our afflicted country, are utterly without foundation. One disclaimer the author of these pages thinks it due to himself to make. In this, or any other adverse criticism, he is conscious of no motive of private resentment - no sense of personal wrong.
