Excerpt: ... Remarks at the Dinner of the New York Press Club in New York City on February 27,1906. HAVE for some time known of the New York Press Club, but never before has it been my fortune to examine the article at close range and first hand. Assuming that its members write the articles that we read in the newspapers, I have long felt that the organization was well named -- a club. The primary meaning of club (I do not assume to give a technical dictionary) is something with which to bat the other fellow. I have too frequently been the other fellow. I am sure that if I should attempt to enumerate, I could locate on my single person, more black and blue spots, resulting from a violent contact between your club and my anatomy than Mark Anthony described wounds upon the body of the dead Caesar. In this place did the Herald bump me; See what a swelling here the Evening Post did make; On this the well beloved Sun did knock; And here the envious Press once swatted me. I stopped counting, gentlemen, for reasons other than a lack of weltings to exhibit. I suppose that Jefferson meant, and that the doctrine of equality certainly still means, and always will mean, that every one -- black and white, rich and poor, the dweller on Fifth Avenue and the dweller on the poorest, meanest sand farm in my own County of Saratoga, has certain natural rights, among which is the right to come into court, unvexed and unhindered, and present his grievance and have it determined in our common tribunal. And yet, and yet, there has existed on our statute book for fifteen years, or more, and exists yet, although, please God, there are hopeful signs of its early repeal, a law that forbids a person having a certain form of claim against an insurance company, a claim based on a contract issued by ...
