

Witchwoman

Set in 1761 Victoria Nathan - victim of a brutish, drunken husband is near despair when she is told of a healing woman called Sera Kane, who operates a small shop in the French Quarter of New Orleans. The two women begin to fall in love with each other and Victoria soon discovers Sera is a practitioner of more than merely the arts of healing. There are those who proclaim the woman to be a witch. EXCERPT: He lurched towards her unsteadily, unaware of the small wax figure she held. The long sharp fingernail on the index finger of her other hand pierced deeply into the wax crotch of the man-shaped form. With a prolonged howl of agony, Jeremy clutched himself and tottered backward. His heels caught on the edge of the carpeting at the top of the stairs and he teetered precariously. His hands left his wounded manhood as he flailed his arms wildly in the air in a futile attempt to regain his balance and stop his fall. Then with a loud yell he tumbled backward. Just as he did, Sera put out a hand towards him and drew him back. Panting, he fell forward onto the upstairs landing, on his hands and knees. He stared at her with disbelief. As he tried to stand up, Seras outstretched hand held him powerless, forcing him to remain on his knees. At last he crawled off on his hands and knees down the hallway towards his own rooms. You wanted to destroy him. Micheline stated. Yes. Sera admitted.

What stopped you? The cat asked curiously. I must first know completely of her feelings for him. Victoria started in her sleep, moaning softly and Sera went back into the room to her. As she laid a hand gently on Victorias shoulder, she relaxed once more, moving into a deeper, heavier, more healing sleep. Sera moved her hand up to lay it upon Victorias forehead. Dream my beautiful one. She trailed her fingertips lightly across the surface of Victorias skin. And let your dreams be of me. While still physically in the room and capable of interacting in that reality, Sera also seamlessly slipped inside Victorias dream.
