

France: The New Republic (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from France: The New Republic
Two examples come easily to the mind. The source of the discredit into which the Fourth Republic fell was the con tinuing war in Algeria, yet the adoption of a new Constitution, as such, did not end the Algerian war; at the best it provided better conditions for the seeking and possibly for the finding of solutions. A partly exterior event was certain to be one of the main tests of the worth of the new institutions as it had demonstrated the deficiencies of the old.
