

Down Grove: A novel

When the badly beaten body of a mentally disabled man named Buddy Karamarkovich is found in the alley behind the Croatian Club on Grove Avenue, the police try to pin the murder on a young ethnic gang leader. After it becomes apparent he's not guilty, detective Nukes Budash is called upon to either solve the murder or cover up the botched case. Grove Avenue is a place to hang out, socialize, and have fun. It's about jokes, laughter, and having a good time. Buddy Karamarkovich was a popular figure on Grove—which is exactly why his murder doesn't make sense. Budash's investigation leads him down mysterious pathways, both physical and personal, where he learns astounding facts about the scrupulous behaviors and residents of his rough hometown of South Lorain. He is drawn up and down Grove Avenue, desperately trying to piece together clues leading to red feathers, molestation rings, and ancient rituals. In the heart-pounding, hold-your-breath finale, Budash must harness all of his mental and physical strength to bring the real criminal to justice and avoid becoming the next victim.
