Not illustrated. 1880 Excerpt: ...overdrawn by a line in the description of her untiring zeal, her marvellous practical ability, and her exalted and saintly devotion. Nor is anything wanting, assuredly, in the thoroughly complete and intelligent history which Professor Estlin Carpenter has given of Miss Carpenters multifarious philanthropic projects and achievements. It is a history which cannot fail to interest every reader, and is full of information even for those who once, in a measure, shared her labors. There are, however, I apprehend, beside these great features of Mary Carpenters life, several minor ones which her biographer has either omitted, or only partially delineated (as was inevitable) at second hand; and these, it appears to me, might be advantageously added by friends nearer in age to the beloved subject of the memoirs, and qualified to record the first impressions made on a stranger by her physical and moral aspect. I do not hope in the following brief Recollections to produce such a supplement to Mr. Carpenters excellent biography, but only to contribute a few touches which may help those who never knew this noble woman to realize what she was in the flesh, and to rekindle tender memories in the hearts of those who both knew and loved her. The Life and Work of Mary Carpenter. By J. Estlin Carpenter, M.A. Macmillan & Co. 1879. It was with a true insight into human nature that Sir Arthur Helps made one of his Friends in Council say that he considers it a test of perfect friendship that we may feel free to laugh at our friend The more we esteem and revere them in our innermost souls, the more we need to feel thus at liberty to jest with them concerning the little whims, idiosyncrasies, and droll
